In the middle of a busy, tree-lined street in midtown Sacramento is a Victorian house that’s home to a yoga and personal training studio with a cheerful name, a happy owner, and several long-eared mascots. Healthy Habits, opened by Rose Zahnn in 1993, offers not only exercise and healthy living classes to human clients, but also a helping hand to local rabbits in need.

An outgoing and friendly woman, Zahnn seems to bubble over with energy. In addition to her work within the midtown business community, she has also become known as a kind of local “bunny guru” over the last few years. Locals and clients consult her when they find stray rabbits, have questions about their bunnies or are debating whether to adopt a rabbit. As a longtime animal lover, it’s a role she relishes – although it brings a smile to her face when people assume that she’s been around rabbits her whole life. Actually, as she tells the story, Zahnn fell into the role of informal “bunny educator” almost by accident.

Discovering a Passion

A few years ago, a client asked Zahnn if she would take in a stray rabbit found by a friend. Zahnn had had a pet rabbit once before and was tempted, but she was initially hesitant because she was unsure of how her dog, Ms. Daisy, would react to a small newcomer. But once they met, and it was clear that there would be no problem, Zahnn adopted the rabbit, named Winter.

Winter, like Ms. Daisy, quickly settled into Zahnn’s lifestyle, accompanying her pretty much everywhere. “She’s the original Healthy Habit Rabbit,” Zahnn says, laughing. “I have a two-seater Honda, and every morning Ms. Daisy would hop into the front seat and Winter would get into her carrier.” Because of the nature of Zahnn’s business, it didn’t seem unusual for two four-legged companions to be hanging around at work. Zahnn describes it as the “pet therapy element at Healthy Habits.”

On January 26th, SHRS volunteer Barbara Koenigsmark was contacted by the Sacramento City Animal Shelter. They were about to receive a large number of rabbits seized from their owners and they requested our help with processing them into the shelter. Originally, they told us there would be around 48 rabbits, but the actual count was close to 100. There were angoras and lops, mothers with newborn babies, juveniles, etc. The shelter staff was overwhelmed by the numbers and needed our help.

Our members stepped up to the challenge and brought cages, crows, food and hay to the shelter. We also gave the most important gift – the gift of our time. This included all the “dirty work” of cleaning cages and the “fun work” of grooming and petting the rabbits. We brought exercise pens so the bunnies could have some time out of their cramped quarters to stretch their legs and do a few “bunny binkies.”

Another volunteer rescue group called “A New Hope Animal Foundation” joined us in the overwhelming chore of grooming dozens of matted rabbits and trimming nails. Kim DeWoody and her volunteers spent days working on getting all the rabbits’ fur back into beautiful shape. What a wonderful and patient group of folks! They also did their share of cage cleaning too.

The shelter set up a temporary tent to house the majority of the rabbits. The mothers with babies were moved indoors to keep warm. Kim and her group took several of them into their foster program, along with a few of the adults who had potential health issues.

On January 31st we got the green light to publicize the situation and ask for help. We posted a plea on Craigslist, our website, the National website and several to other egroups. In addition to our online pleas, we worked with the staff at the shelter to hold a special adoption day on February 18th. Thankfully the weather co-operated and we were able to set up several pens to display the rabbits. They all had a wonderful time taking turns in the pens and “showing off” to potential adopters. We gave each adopter a copy of the House Rabbit Handbook.

Only one month later, we are delighted to announce that there are only 30 rabbits still left at the shelter. They have all been moved indoors and the tent is retired from duty. Our members will continue to come and volunteer at the shelter to help care for the rabbits, display them in pens and give potential adopters information about owning and caring for a rabbit, so they can make the decision of whether a rabbit is the right companion for them.

Our SHRS volunteers never cease to amaze me. When asked, they always step up to the challenge and open their hearts to bunnies in need. I am so proud to be a part of such a remarkable group of dedicated bunny lovers. Bless you all!

The Rabbit Habit

Habits … clients could come to the studio to connect not only with other humans, but also friendly, furry beings.”

Sadly, Ms. Daisy passed away unexpectedly about six months after Zahnn adopted Winter. The loss was hard for Zahnn, and soon she began to wonder if Winter was lonely without her companion, too. Searching the HRS website, Zahnn found a photo of a handsome male bunny named Enuff. It was a match made in heaven when the two bunnies first met nose-to-nose. “I like to tell people they met online,” Zahnn jokes. But the adoption of a second bunny meant a shift in lifestyle. Winter and Nuffy now spend most of their days at Zahnn’s home and commute to work with her less often. “Sometimes I work long days, and there’s a lot of coming and going,” Zahnn explains. “There was too much stress involved in moving them in the summer heat.”

Filling a Need

But Zahnn couldn’t be without a companion at the office for long. And Winter’s empty cage at the studio seemed far too lonely. When another client found a rabbit in midtown Sacramento, it seemed like kismet, and Zahnn agreed to take in Honey the Bunny as a temporary foster. However, Honey – who Zahnn calls “a poster child for a stuffed animal” – stole Zahnn’s heart and soon joined the Zahnn family as a permanent resident as well. Now Zahnn had three bunnies at home – and again, an empty cage at work!

Ever-resourceful, Zahnn next hit upon the idea of partnering with the HRS to create a fostering program in her studio. As she initially envisioned it, the program would be called the “Bun of the Month,” with an HRS rabbit spending days socializing with clients and staff at Healthy Habits (and getting the run of the studio when traffic was slow). The first bunny in the program was “Mr. Bunny” (later renamed “Spike”), a stray who was missing both ears. As a special-needs rabbit, his looks turned plenty of heads, but it was his winning personality that won over most of the studio’s clients. Though he didn’t find a permanent home while at Healthy Habits, he – and the HRS foster program – earned a lot of positive exposure from Zahnn’s efforts.

Mr. Bunny was followed by Simba, the second “Bun of the Month.” Zahnn was smitten with Simba, who was the male half of a pair of Lionhead (angora) rabbits rescued from the Yolo County Animal Shelter. Getting to know Simba led to Zahnn’s adoption of Simba’s sister Puff (who turned out to be a good mate for Honey back home). And so the Zahnn household grew by one more rabbit (“I need to get a bigger house!” she jokes).

Expanding a Business, an Animal Family, and Volunteer Efforts

For now, Zahnn is taking a break from fostering, but she’s showing no signs of slowing down, either professionally or in her advocacy work for local rabbits. This past fall, she opened a second Healthy Habits location on J Street, and continues to actively lobby for HRS in other ways – she’s organizing a “Run for the Buns” fun run and spa day fundraiser for HRS on March 28 (see page 5), and she recently gave a talk at an HRS adoption day about how companion rabbits can be an important part of healthy living, even in the workplace.

To Zahnn, the topic of her talk was a natural, as her animals are as much a part of her daily life as eating and breathing. “I’ve always been an animal lover; we raised German Shepherds when I was a child, and responsible pet ownership was embedded in my upbringing,” she explains. “Through all the years of college and getting situated with my business, I didn’t feel like I would be a very good pet owner, because I didn’t have the time required to give (a pet) the attention needed. But when Ms. Daisy came along, I found that I could make her a part of my life – I could make it work. And when Winter came along, it was like, ok, this can work, too.”

Zahnn adds that she enjoys answering questions and offering advice. “My bunnies are sort of my kids, and I love being able to educate. Because I see so many people, there’s a real opportunity there. Maybe efforts like this can eventually change the course of homeless animals.”

Bunnies Inspire Young Artists

SHRS pet therapy bunnies Kimmie and Kylie are old pros at working with children, but last May they received a special request. The art teacher at Shriner’s Hospital asked if they could attend class one morning and serve as models for young painters.

Kimmie and Kylie took their place in the classroom. One bunny at a time was the featured “model”, and she was located on a table in the middle of a room in an exercise pen, with all the budding artists at tables in a semi-circle facing her.

The lesson that day was to learn about watercolors. Each child was given the three primary colors. Kimmie is a dark gray, and Kylie is a brown/taupe.

Each student sketched a pencil outline of the model, mixed his watercolors and began to paint. Gray and brown/taupe were not easy colors to produce, but the kids did a wonderful and creative job.

As each rendition progressed, it became clear that each artist had his own vision of the finished product and how he wanted to accomplish it. Some included details and backgrounds such as the sun, grass and, of course, carrots! As might be expected, the bunnies’ legs seemed to be the biggest challenge.

Although there was no physical interaction between the students and the rabbits, the kids worked very intently on their art and studied the bunnies very carefully. Kimmie and Kylie took turns on the table throughout the morning, and they did very well. After all, they had their usual “comforts” and plenty of attention! It was great fun and a pleasant experience for all.

Adoption and Information Clinics

Are you thinking about adding a bunny to your household? Or are you just looking to learn more about the one you’ve already got? Regardless of whether you’ve had a rabbit for years or if you’re new to the joys of rabbit companionship, you’ll have a great time at our monthly Adoption and Information Clinics. Come ask us questions about bunny behavior, care, grooming, nutrition, or anything else you can think of. We have free printed information on a variety of topics, and, of course, we also have our fabulous fosters on hand, waiting for just the right family to come along! The adoption donation is $50 ($75 for two), and includes a copy of The House Rabbit Handbook.

If you already have a bunny, you’re welcome to bring him or her to the Clinic in a secure carrier. We do offer nail trims for a $5 donation, but please call our hotline at least 48 hours in advance to set an appointment time (so we’ll be sure to have someone available for you!). Please also bring your own, sterilized clippers. Grooming and de-matting services are also available outside of Clinic hours, but by appointment only. Call our hotline for more information.

Tell UC Davis about your Rascally Rabbit

The UC Davis Vet school is conducting a web survey about the effects of altering on rabbit behavior. Share your experiences and contribute to the understanding of the relationship between altering and behavior.

These surveys are for pet rabbits only, not rabbits used for commercial or scientific purposes. The survey results will be published & made public after the survey has been completed & analyzed.

For those who have multiple rabbits, please complete only one survey for one rabbit in your household. Please choose the rabbit that you have owned for at least 3 months and whose name begins with the letter(s) closest to the beginning of the alphabet. For example, if your rabbits are named Bonnie and Rex and you have owned both for at least 3 months, only complete the survey for Bonnie. If your rabbits’ names are Bonnie and Ben, only answer the survey for Ben.

There are 3 surveys depending on the alteration status of your rabbit.

Rascally Rabbits I - for rabbits that were intact when acquired but are now spayed or neutered:

Rascally Rabbits II - for rabbits that were already spayed or neutered when acquired:
